Rev. Kelli Taylor

Learn how to create balanced and trustful relationships with the leaders to whom you report, understand when to be proactive in different situations, identify the skills needed to step in and assume responsibility, and recognize when it is appropriate to challenge leadership while upholding the priorities of the organization.

This presentation is a required seminar in the Professional Manager's Certificate program. Faculty, staff, graduate students, and full-time students are eligible to participate.

About the Speakers

Dr. Lori Brookman is Methodist University's associate vice president for academic affairs and a professor of biology. Rick Lowe is vice president of enrollment services. He has been at MU since 1996. His primary responsibilities include supervision of admissions, financial aid, and veteran services.

Dave Eavenson is a graduate of Methodist College and coached the MU football team in 2011. Since retiring to MU, he has become the vice president and director of athletics. Rev. Kelli Taylor is the chaplain and vice president for religious life and community engagement. Her interests include peace and reconciliation, interfaith religious literacy, liturgy, advocacy/justice on death penalty issues, teaching and Christian discipleship.
